1. [REDACTED] a VF tank distribution point with an affiliated repair shop, at which acceptance courses were held, was located in Jueterbog.¹ 25X1
2. A tank repair shop for general overhauling was located in the former torpedo testing station in Neubrandenburg.²
3. Small repair shops for infantry and artillery weapons were located in Frenz-lau, Basewalk and Frora on Ruegen Island. They had limited powers and were, for instance authorized to open and refill lead-sealed pneumatic recuperators only in the presence of a technical officer, who regularly inspected the installations, and came from Doberlug.
4. In January 1954 [REDACTED] all shipments of weapons to and from the main ordnance depot in Doberlug-Hennersdorf were made by rail and were handled by the section of General Wulz.³ 25X1
5. In mid-January, new weapons, for the first time, delivered in Doberlug included 2 x 122-mm tank gun barrels, 11 x 85-mm tank guns, 9 x 76-mm T-34 tank guns, 3 x 76-mm self-propelled gun mounts, 1 recoil mechanism for self-propelled mounts, 4 periscopes for tanks, 6 model Ch-16 machine guns and 4 model Ch-17 machine guns.⁴

1. [REDACTED] Comment. A KVP supply installation in Jueterbog is reported for the first time. [REDACTED] quarters for KVP units were to be built in Jueterbog. It is possible that these installations were to include a tank repair shop.
2. [REDACTED] Comment. The newly established KVP tank repair shop in Neubrandenburg has previously been reported. [REDACTED] 25X1
3. [REDACTED] Comment. The installations mentioned are known as small repair shops of individual units. General Major Hans Wulz is known as chief of administration of artillery supply with the Ministry of the Interior.
